

Warsaw, Poland

Thursday, 14 June 2007

We left Berlin at 9:30 am for our next destination,

Warsaw, Poland . We had high pressure dominating our route and we were expecting a very smooth flight. With 15 knots of tail wind at flight level 110, we pulled the power back to save on fuel, since we had a good tail wind. Our GPS was indicating 189 knots.

Fuel prices were reasonable and the personnel at W.A. services were very helpful.

Â

Since we bypassing Moscow, we will stay in Poland and enjoy the city until Saturday and depart for Ankara, Turkey on June 16th .

Â

We tried to relax for couple of days at

Poland

Warsaw

is very modern, and clean. People are friendly and anxious to share their culture.

Â

Â

We used this opportunity to do laundry.

Â

Â

Finding people who are proud of there culture was not that difficult. Find any authentic Polish restaurant, and you will see people in a large group singing and listing to the live music.
