With Monson season, now over

India , we have a little challenge ahead of us. There is rain east of our route to Pakistan and

India .

Our flight over Pakistan to

India was relativity smooth and uneventful and we landed at Gundy International at 4:30 pm.Â

Â

After landing, we could not find any handler to take us to the terminal. After 15 minutes of walking to the terminal, the airport police would not let us in the terminal and told us we can not enter without a handler.

Of course, we could not get a handler without entering the terminal. We were stuck behind the system with police all around us, and we knew we were in a third world country. A chaotic situation that only appears to be solved with money and a ground handler. After jumping through many hoops, we managed to find a handler. He told us what it would cost, and started to work. We sat in a room for hours, waiting for the handler to go and see authorities. We felt like being in a prison. Six and half hours after our landing we were finally permitted to go and see the authorities and enter the country. I am not sure that I ever like to come back to

India.

We visited the city and had a little taste of India's side walk cafe food and fruit stand.
